

Larry Feldman, Jr. (Page 1 of 3)

Larry Feldman is an attorney with McGlinchey Stafford's New Orleans, Louisiana, office. He is a successful litigator who has tried a wide variety of cases in his more than 45 years of active practice. He is well respected by the bench and the bar and has used his extensive litigation and trial experience to develop effective and efficient strategies to resolve each case. He works in partnership with clients to address any concerns, such as how litigation can affect business, timely resolution, and close management of litigation costs. Larry received his mediator training at the Straus Institute for Dispute Resolution at Pepperdine University School of Law.

Larry's practice has focused on commercial litigation, representing banking clients in matters alleging conversion of instruments and funds transfer, fraud, banks' duties to their customers, and the commercial reasonableness of the bank's standards and practices. He also represents corporate and individual clients in corporate, contract, business and general litigation.

Larry served for three years in the United States Army Judge Advocate General's Corps after law school, and then returned to Louisiana. He has served in several capacities in the Louisiana State Bar Association including as President from 2002 to 2003.
